The Making of a Safety Leadership Program - Warts and All

Google “improving safety in the workplace” and it will bring about 20,800,000 hits in 0.42 seconds. On the one hand, it shows how popular the topic is, on the other, it also makes for an inextricable jungle of theories, solutions, programs and opinions all aimed at improving safety. Making head or tail of the available information can be quite a challenge!

Richard’s presentation will take you through the process of developing a safety leadership program based on engaging employees in the safety process. Eight years ago “safety leadership” was not as mainstream as it is now, but it has quickly emerged as a basic requirement across industries.

Connect’s approach to safety leadership is anchored in the research-based evidence that shows that progressing beyond policies, processes and compliance programs, safety will further improve only if the whole workforce is fully engaged in the safety process. Experience and history proves that any successful safety leadership program needs to be practical and self-sustaining. Connect’s range of safety leadership tools have been implemented with various degrees of success mainly in the offshore industry from the North Sea to the Gulf of Mexico, the Gulf of Guinea and the South China Sea.

Attend this special breakfast event to hear Richard discuss the development of a safety leadership program including barriers encountered on the way, key factors that contributed to resounding successes and listen as he explores why, in some cases, the program failed.

ABOUT THE PRESENTER

Richard Barna is the managing director and proprietor of Connect SL.

Richard’s interest in safety is predominantly an interest in human behaviour. He believes that across industries, leaders are poorly equipped to leverage “human factors” in a long term endeavour to sustainably improve safety performance. This key concept is what defines the work that has been undertaken at Connect SL over the past 8 years and is on-going.

Richard holds an MBA from UWA and a Masters degree in Sports Science from the University of Paris. He also holds a Certificate IV in Workplace Training and Assessment and is an Open Space Technology facilitator.
